AROUND THE WORLD

1. Astrophysics: Parker Solar Probe flew to the closest point near the solar surface on Christmas Eve reaching 430,000 mph. Nevertheless, even with the temperatures that were 1,400L C, the spacecraft sent back invaluable information on the acceleration of the solar wind, thus completing a seven-year mission that has contributed significantly to the development of heliophysical theory.

2. Technological Sociology: Modern technologists theorize that the 2025 will be the Year of the Agent. In a year of time, the paradigm of user interaction was changed to not entering queries into search interfaces but using AI agents who will autonomously control financial matters, healthcare indicators, and schedules. The traditional application-store paradigm is therefore being fading away because users are becoming more dependant on conversational AI solely to end up with a result.

3. Conservation Biology: Colossal Biosciences has achieved a viable embryo of the Tasmanian tiger (Thylacine) by the germline editing of a marsupial host which is a close related. Although hatching will be a contingent factor once additional developmental studies are complete, the successful hatching of the embryo does indicate that events of extinction can be reversible under special genetic manipulations, therefore leading to heated bioethical debate on rewilding of extinct organisms.

4. International Relations: A historic treaty was held at Geneva where countries who attended the treaty signed a convention titled the Treaty on Autonomous Weapons which banned the use of unmanned aerial drones that could choose and attack human targets without human intervention. It is the inaugural substantial legal framework which restricts use of conflicting militaristic application of artificial intelligence, so on the one hand, these accords mark a critical development in world arms control.

5. Exoplanetary Science: James Webb Space Telescope observations prove the presence of a huge ocean on the exoplanet K218b. The unequivocal detection of water vapor and dimethyl sulfide - a compound that is generally biomarker on Earth - in spectroscopic measurements consequently enhanced the position of the planet in the list of the best places to locate extraterrestrial life.
