Concept Note

This workshop is being organised by School of Social Sciences and Languages, Vellore Institute of Technology in association with Universidad Católica del Maule in Chile. It aims to guide the doctoral scholars and early career researchers to understand publication and its world in all its complexities. The workshop attempts to provide knowledge on various themes on writing, reading and reviewing to argue that publishing in high impact journals needs training and guidance. Researchers are often lost, confused, or clueless on finding journals and lack the know how of scientific communication; organized and systematic review of literature; the art and science of writing research papers and key strategies to avoid manuscript rejections. Lack of this knowledge often leads to delays, confusion and failure to publish on time. Catering to these concerns, this one-day workshop is primarily designed for doctoral scholars and researchers to offer them some help so that they can understand the challenges of doing good research and publishing in relevant journals. The resource persons for the workshop have international reputation and have been successfully publishing in high standard journal. We hope that the expertise of the resource person will make this one-day workshop useful to our researchers.
